

All of our projects, including this beautiful opportunity at The Guanacaste Country Club include social responsibility and environmental sensitivity as central elements. I have spent much of my life in the public arena. The last several years I have worked as the director of a major philanthropy in Central America providing pediatric aids relief, building homes and providing scholarships for the poorest of the poor. More accurately, our donors and dedicated field workers were the instruments of that relief.

Now that I am involved with Craig Williamson as a business partner and friend, I want to bring that same spirit of giving and service to everything we do. Not only is it the right thing to do as a developer in the local community; it is intensely practical from a business standpoint. Prioritizing the health and wellbeing of employees, members of the local community and protecting the breathtaking beauty that is Costa Rica is a money maker.

Engagement and entrepreneurship are 21st Century concepts to be propelled by technology and the new paradigm linking development with social justice.

We know there are like minded women and men who have the vision and ambition to create a new more muscular development model that will produce wealth along with well being.
